The Southern Express Company will ultimate view to a personal share in such development." Of course Hows has an understanding with the President, and knows that the annexation scheme is by in means played out. He will return from San Domingo in time to publish a magnificent private report for the heat scale of Congress. How mitch money he will draw from the secret service fund to pay his expenses, the world will prob bly never know. They have an association of working men in Boston which is well worth imi tating in Louisville. Its object is to secur for its members cheap houses on a sort of for its members cheap houses on a sort of co-operative plan. Mr. Josuan Quincz, who is at the head of the association, says they "propose to build fifty houses of a better class, which if creeted singly, would cost $2,000 each, or $100,000, assuming that there would be a discount of twenty five per cost, as I am assumed by builders each member pays down $200, or $10,000 in the aggregate, reducing the amount required on merigages to $65,000, or about two-thirds of the value of the houses if erected singly, assuming that the money is obtained at seven per cent. interest, and that interest is received on the deposita.' This is briefly Mr. QUINCY's plan. At the iation of $18,267. Duck River Valley Railroad.

Among the many eminent services to his country of General J. T. Bortz, whose memory will remain deeply impressed upon the hearts of all of us, are to be reckoned the able and convincing arguments in favor of narrow-gauge railroads that he presented in a series of articles in our columns. The attention of the public was umns. The attention of the public was aroused in a great degree by these, and considerable discussion has taken place in consequence through the country among those interested in the building of rall-roads. We have recently received a pamphlet from E. F. Falconer containing the report of the railroad commissioners, of which he was the chairman to the needle which he was the chairman, to the peop of the Duok River Valley, in Tennesse This river is, like many of the streams the Southwestern States, not navigable by reason of shoals and rapids, and is of such ittle importance that many of our readers perhaps never even heard of it before. Nevertheless it is one of the most fertile ralleys in Tennessee, and so rich in natural resources that it needs but the outlay of a comparatively small amount of capital to produce much wealth and to connect a ourishing population with the best may eets. One of the largest beds of iron ore n Tennessee extends along this river for a listance of about forty miles. Furnaces have been put in operation, which produced a superior quality of iron; but the cost of transportation consumed all the profits, and the fires had to be put out. Yet the river always furnishes an unfailing an inlimited water power, and could a rail-coad be built to the Cumberland mountain, that a constant supply of coal could be obtained, and a lateral connection across ee be thus secured, inas much as it would connect with three im-portant lines, the greatest benefits would ollow its completion. Tennessee presents, from its physical configuration, the greatest obstacles to the railroad engineer. The surveyor finds among its isolated mountainous regions that deep cuts, tunnels, bridges will have that deep cuts, tunnels, bridges will have to be made in constant and varying suc-cession. The expenses then of building an ordinary broad-gauge railroad, where bluffs, ravines, swamps and rivers oppose such extraordinary obstacles, would be so great as to appall the most sanguine. For these very reasons, however, it seems as though in Tennessee is the very place where necessity demands and prudence dictates the construction of the narrow-gauge railroads wherever the requirements. gauge railroads wherever the requirements of commerce demand any railroad to be

It is no doubt true that some of the best counties in Tennessee, favored with the most fertile soil and delightful climate in the Southwest, and rich in vast mines of eral wealth, are to-day absoluted out from the commerce of initerial weatta, are to-day absolutely locked out from the commerce of the world, because they have no outlet but the wretched public roads, sometimes entirely impassable, and a few turnpikes remarkable for their evil condition and exorbitant tolls. Heretofore the expense of a railroad of ordinary gauge has been the insuperable obstacle in the way of progress. In the pamphlet before us it is very clearly shown that a railroad of as narrow a gauge as three feet can be constructed for sbout one-third the cost of one of five feet, and all the arguments with which our readers are familiar are expressed with a lucid and powerful style that we hope may carry conviction into the hearts of the inhabitants through whose counties this road will pass; and that they will heartly had speedly subscribe the funds needed to build their railway, and come into still closer relationship with all parts of our country.
